During the displacement crisis and systems collapse in some of the world's poorest and most fragile states, the capacity of state-led development is severely limited. In such circumstances, the role of international organizations and NGOs is crucial. However, the effectiveness of such organizations is often limited by the lack of local capacity and the need for a more holistic approach to development.

Displacement is a complex phenomenon that involves a range of factors, including political, economic, and social. The impact of displacement is often severe and long-lasting, and it is essential to understand the underlying causes and consequences in order to develop effective responses. This document provides a comprehensive overview of the issues surrounding displacement, from the individual level to the global level.
